SENTENCE SERMONS IN PULPITS OF EL PASO

Our success in life depends on God's blessing on what we are and have, and is limited only by our faith in God.—Rev. Robert Bruce Smith, First Baptist church.

This world is a great battlefield between right and wrong; God's call is for spirit-filled saints to enter the conflict.—Rev. J. J. McElwain, Houston Square Baptist church.

The way of wisdom is a hard road to travel and the summit is mounted with difficulty, but the view of God compensates the struggle for attainment.—Rev. Henry Hanson, Westminster Presbyterian church.

The incentive of the Master was not conveyed with poisoned arrows; His words, while often sharp and piercing, were dipped into the blood of His own life and conveyed the healing balm.—Rev. Perry James Rice, First Christian church.

The charity that will simply pitch a $10 bill into a poor widow's lap is not charity; the charity that hunts up and sympathizes with, and puts its arms around and helps a brother—that is the charity that takes us close to heaven.—Rev. Casper S. Wright, Trinity Methodist church.

What we have to ask ourselves is not what shall be gained by a certain course of action, but what this thing is worth after we have gained it, for "what shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?"—Rev. Henry Easter, Church of St. Clement.

Pagilism is of pure heathen origin and has never risen above its source, but Paul uses the temperance and self-denying training of the pugilist to illustrate how we should live for Christ's sake and in view of the endless crowd we are to win.—Rev. R. T. Hanks, Calvary Baptist church.

As God and his angels look down on the silent history of the homes of earth and of those men-building processes which go on in a father's and mother's heart and mind through a score of years, their heroic sacrifices and love and unselfish endeavor any well be compared with the spirit of Jesus who stands alone and alone among the multitudes of the heroic souls of earth.—Rev. C. O. Beckman, First Methodist church.

GUAYULE RUBBER OPERATORS CALL OFF TORREON MEETING

Government Encourages Cultivation of Shrubs; Lovers of the Guayule Shrub; Personal News.

Torreón, July 11.—The idea of holding a convention of the guayule rubber manufacturers in this city has been abandoned, owing to lack of interest.

Torreón and Gomez Palacio are the center of the richest guayule districts in Mexico and nearly all of the principal factories are located in one or the other of these cities.

A number of people are cultivating the plant, which can be done at a small profit. The guayule shrub can be grown on land that is absolutely good for nothing else. The more water it gets the faster it will grow, but it will mature sufficient for gathering within four or five years with very little water.

Some of the large haciendas are planting some of their best land to the guayule shrub and will irrigate it.

Several books have been published on the growing of the guayule shrub and its culture is to be encouraged by the government, as it will be the means of bringing millions of acres of arid land under cultivation.

GREAT DAM BOOSTS THE PRICES OF LAND IN VALLEY

Reclamation Service Given Out Some Figures on the Advance in Price Since Project was Assured.

Washington, D. C., July 11.—Preparations for the reclamation service for construction of the big Elephant Butte dam have given a great impetus to agricultural development in that part of New Mexico, according to a statement by the reclamation service.

The increase in the value of lands in the first unit of the Rio Grande project, it was said, has been taken as an indication of future prosperity throughout the irrigable areas.

Under the Leasburg diversion last year, 25,500 acres were irrigated and the average yield was said to be doubtless would exceed that amount. The value of land under cultivation at present varies from $100 to $300 per acre, and that of raw land from $50 to $100.

The majority of the land is now in the hands of Americans, it was added, while previous to the advent of the reclamation service it was controlled by farmers of Mexican extraction.

PRIMARIES WILL NOT BE BINDING

One County in Texas Takes Outright Action to This Effect.

San Antonio, Texas, July 11.—The action of Goliad county, through the Democratic executive committee, in abolishing all participants in the Democratic primary from their obligations to support the Democratic nominee for governor if he refuses to abide by the results of those primaries on the question of submission and prohibition, is spreading to other portions of the state and promises to be more or less generally adopted.

This county did not desire to hold any Democratic primaries and when the executive committee found out that it had no voice in the matter, a meeting was called and the primaries were ordered.

In view of the fact that G. R. Colquitt had made the statement that he did not intend to abide by the results of a submission, the committee adopted a resolution abjuring all voters participating in the primary of any obligations to support the nominees, if such should be the case.

The committee failed to see why the primaries should be binding on the participants when it was not on the nominees, and plainly said so.

The same sentiment seems to prevail all over the state and even where the pledge is pretty certain that they will vote in the primary and take the oath with a mental reservation that they will not be bound unless the condition is bound.

This would indicate, in case Colquitt was nominated that there will be considerable bolting with a possibility that the prohibitionists may bolt the party altogether and nominate a man of their own to lead their forces to victory.
